

“ I think our emergency checklist is really important, because it could save a life. ”

“One of the things our occupational health committee has done is to develop an emergency procedures checklist for medical emergencies, accidents, fires or severe weather. We all agreed we needed to do this.

“Every new employee receives a copy of the list, and it's posted in every work area and by every first aid station in the dealership. It's simple, basic information, but it's something you might not think about unless you have people thinking about safety in the workplace.

“I think it's really important, because one day one employee could save the life of another.”

Michelle Amendt, Sales and Marketing, and Co-chair, Occupational Health Committee, Centennial Ford, Watrous
